

Loyola students to strike Monday

Loyola students will strike all day Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

A general meeting of all Loyola students will be held at noon Friday to inform them of the strike action.

The strike is to support demands for binding arbitration in the case of physics professor Srinivasa Santhanam fired earlier this year by the administration and for increased student representation on Senate.

Students originally supported calling the strike in a referendum Oct. 14 that had an 83 percent turnout.

1,775 voted for the action and 1,762 against.

Student President Marcel Nouvet postponed the action, however, in order to give the administration time to come to an agreement.

The Board of Trustees agreed to give Professor Santhanam half salary for a year's sabbatical on a terminal contract and excellent references to other institutions. College President Father Patrick Malone seemed to agree, and so did the Canadian Association of University Teachers, called in to help mediate.

Other administration officials pressured against the deal however, particularly the academic Vice-President, and it was finally withdrawn.

David Allnut, editor of the Loyola News, said, "Negotiations to settle the matter privately broke down completely."

Father Malone announced his intention Monday to set up a Commission of University Government. However, students were not satisfied by this gesture of conciliation.

The Faculty Association then gave the President until next week to come to terms. He failed to gain cooperation from the administration.

A faculty petition for strike support had gained over 30 signatures by yesterday. Supporting faculty will cancel classes during the strike.

The Faculty Association is now expected to unequivocally demand binding arbitration by the CAUT for Santhanam and the formation of a committee to study the entire administration set-up on the campus.

The Arts Council met last night to discuss the issue but reliable student sources have said this meeting will not affect the strike action.

CANINE forces invaded the Union yesterday to help kickoff Blood Drive '69.

Yesterday's total bleeding was 575 pints, compared to 599 pints on the first day of last year's Blood Drive. Today's Drive clinic features The California Boycott during the afternoon, while tonight has been set aside as Faculty night, with bleeding going on until 9 pm. Babysitting will be provided for evening donors.

Council withdraws student senators

by NORM TOLLINSKY

Students' Council last night decided not to send student representatives to Senate meetings until the Committee for the Continuing Review of University Government is called into session to take action on a restructuring of university government. Council stated that it was thereby firmly opposing the existing system under which McGill University is governed.

Committees barely filled, apathetic students knocked

by GEORGE BEILER

Barely enough students applied for positions on Senate committees to fill the available posts.

This information was revealed yesterday by Students' Society External Vice-President Martin Shapiro, who called the lack of student interest "shocking" and "disappointing."

Shapiro added that the poor student response had led him to question his support of increased student representation on governing bodies.

"When we barely get enough students to fill committees," he said "and when those who apply are often noticeably lacking in original ideas, we should reassess our position."

Shapiro added, "If we want a greater student voice in the future we must convince other sectors of the university community that we have something to contribute."

He said that this year's show of student disinterest in committees.

A more radical proposal made by Margo Verral, Education representative, demanding a refusal to send student representatives to Senate until an actual reform of university government is granted, failed to attract sufficient support.

Student senators Harry Edel and Peter Foster spoke to Council urging the adoption of Marg Verral's proposal. They argued that a refusal to send student representatives to Senate until it agrees to reform university government would constitute a major issue which would break through the apathy at McGill and, thereby, mobilize student support for reform.

Julius Grey, President of the Students' Society, argued that an absence of students from Senate until student demands are met would not be in the interest of the university community. He said that such action would imply a refusal to legitimize the uni-

Advisory bodies planned for senators

A radical plan which would create advisory bodies for student representatives on Senate committees was announced yesterday by Students' Society External Vice-President Martin Shapiro.

Under the plan, a parallel advisory committee would be established for each Senate committee or subcommittee on which students are represented.

These committees would be composed of the student representatives on the corresponding Senate committee or subcommittee, and other interested students.

In this manner, Shapiro hopes that interested students would be invited to join their representatives on Senate committees in deciding policy.

Shapiro added that major policy would be discussed in open meetings, and that the committees would be open at all times to suggestions and criticisms from other students.

Several larger committees were also proposed.

A joint committee of students on various Senate bodies would be established to discuss common problems, and exchange suggestions and ideas.

Another committee would act as a liaison between the Senate committee representatives and their advisory committees, and Students' Council.

Shapiro also proposed a special grievance committee, to "set up specific channels for massive student participation."

These channels might include suggestion boxes and general student meetings to discuss grievances, he pointed out.

Shapiro explained that the new structures are necessary to bring the student body in general into the decision-making process.

"In the past, he said, "far too much of the student contribution to the University has been made by an elite."

"Last year," he added, "this elite was the Students' Council executive. There was little or no opportunity for the students in general to participate."

The new bodies, Shapiro hopes, will decentralize power by allowing the policy expressed by student representatives on Senate bodies to originate from outside the Students' Council.

He added that more feedback is needed between the student body and student representatives on committees.

ittee seats, and the poor attendance of student representatives at committee meetings, "can only succeed in reinforcing the dogma of some conservatives who insist that students should have no role in the university."

Shapiro also compared his position in selecting student representatives unfavourably with that of the faculty in selecting their representatives.

"The faculty," he said, "is able to select the most qualified persons for its representatives, but students are unable to do so because only one person applies."

David Young, Students' Society Internal Vice-President, when asked to account for student apathy, commented, "Why not? Students' Council and student politics are a joke."

Grey's women committee attacked by Prof. Dixon

The motion to form a committee to investigate women's rights on campus has been placed on the senate's agenda and already it has been attacked by a liberated woman.

The motion was presented to the Senate Steering Committee Monday by Students' Society President Julius Grey. He suggested that the investigation committee be composed of an equal number of men and women.

Marlene Dixon, assistant professor of sociology and a well-known feminist, said the committee should have only women on it.

"It is a woman's problem and therefore the committee should be representative of all women on campus."

She proposed that there be

Council capers

Sir,
On Wednesday night, I was witness to a remarkable display of incompetence, irresponsibility and inefficiency. No, I was not at a Senate meeting or anything like that. I was at a Students' Council Meeting.

I did not see a group of mature students representing their constituents. I did not see a president who commanded the respect of his councillors nor did I see councillors respect their president or each other. What I did see though, were councillors leave the meeting because of waiting girlfriends, etc. Other councillors were absent, probably without valid excuses.

It seemed as though I was watching a baseball game in which all the players and umpires had abandoned regard for the rules and concepts. Thank God I did not see baseball bats, but I did see one illustrious councillor fling a punch in an unacceptable loss of control of temper.

All this, when at stake are numerous vital functions to be acted upon and numerous committees need to be ratified by Council. The only business that I did see were numerous motions to table motions and a motion of censure. When is anything going to get done?

More students should have been present to see what a farce this all was. And all this when students are demanding greater representation and responsibility in University Affairs. If students cannot conduct their own affairs properly how can they command any respect from anybody?

No, Students' Council is doing a great disservice to students as a whole and unless some radical changes in attitude or councillors occur the cause for student participation will have been lost. That is, if it has not already been lost.

I urge all councillors to settle their own petty personality differences (without punches) outside the council room and discuss and settle the issues which are so vital to all of us. After all, that is what you have been elected to do.

(P. E. Georgioliou, Ph.D.3)

Search and Destroy

Sir,
Last Friday afternoon, I had an experience that left me cold. I have long suffered the humiliations of the check-out point in McLennan Library but I believe that this time they went too far. The Barnes Guard demanded to search my handbag. I was so shocked and benumbed that I obediently and robot-like handed it to him to look through. It wasn't until after I had left the Library that the shock wore off sufficiently for me to react, and believe you me, I was furious.

First of all, I want to know if this is standard procedure - it is the first time it has happened to me. Secondly, if other people have had to subject themselves to this kind of treatment, why hasn't someone spoken up before in protest? I believe it is the grossest inroad on my integrity and honour as a student and a human being.

The attitude of the library seems to be that we are all a horde of thieves, and any measure that will catch one of those sneaky little students is justifiable. I resent that, and I am sure that every student does. I would no sooner walk out of that library with a stolen book under my arm than I would throw myself under a freight train. I know only too well the frustration of not being able to find a book that is necessary for the completion of a paper, or that is considered required reading by a professor, and I would not ever put another student in that same situation. And I am sure that other students feel the same.

Which brings me to another point - the ineffectiveness of the "security measures" of the library. The Barnes Guards, by their very presence, are proof positive that they have not stopped the "loss" of books. And I doubt that they ever will. I think that perhaps they are searching the wrong people. It is a known fact that in any public service institution, be it a store or a library, the greatest offenders are the employees of that institution. Perhaps, if the staff were subjected to the same kind of search as we are at present, we would see two results: a decrease of the number of books that disappear, and the disappearance of the Barnes Guards. I am sure that the staff would not put up with the same treatment that we so meekly accept.

A moderate proposal

Last week a radical proposal to re-order the governing structures of the University of Toronto was offered with the support and participation of the University President. It advocated the abolition of the Board of Trustees and the establishment of a supreme governing body consisting of 20 students, 20 faculty, 20 lay members and 6 administrators.

Last night McGill's Students' Council decided that it could no longer accept the position that students had been given in the university. That a university like Toronto could come out with this report while McGill is still mired in tokenism, moved the Council to declare that it would not send its eight student senators until McGill began to seriously consider similar proposals.

There will be no students on Senate until a committee, to recommend how McGill's bodies can be overhauled, is called to sit.

Although it might be argued that students should have withdrawn completely from Senate until they were granted 1/3 representation, it is difficult to expect an institution to overnight revolutionize its view of what a university is.

For the recommendations of the U of T committee presents the concept of a university with tripartite responsibilities: to the students, to the faculty, and to the community at large. Furthermore, in abolishing the Board of Trustees, it made very clear that these and only these three groups should govern the university. If anyone doubts the latent powers still residing in oligarchical bodies such as the Board of Trustees, let him refer to the UCLA Regents' firing of a professor because she was a member of the Communist Party; and the move by the McGill Governors to re-establish control over appointments.

Students are asking the university to consider the proposal at the U of T by establishing this committee immediately. The committee would have three months to examine the present government of the university and make recommendations on how to change it.

When the three month moratorium is up, McGill had better be three months behind the U of T. and no more.

versity at a time when McGill is threatened by external forces.

Grey said, "McGill is a university in danger of a nationalist, right wing mob. We have a certain obligation to the English speaking community of Quebec."

Commenting on the consequences of Marg Verral's proposal if adopted, Grey warned, "We would be supporting those on the streets clamouring for the end of McGill University. It would mean that the McGill community itself would not be united".

In other business at last night's meeting, Council voted to hold a poll "to ascertain the preference of members of the Students' Society" regarding a successor to Principal H. Locke Robertson. Students will be able to nominate a successor by either presenting petitions having 100 signatures or by obtaining the approval of Council.

As part of this motion, Students' Council will also have the right to eliminate "joke candidates".

Council also voted to ratify the composition of the Judicial Committee, as selected by Julius Grey and Alan Schwartz, President of the Law Undergraduate Society. Ratification was secured after unsuccessful attempts to both widen its composition (by including non-law students) and eliminating its binding powers.

A motion instituting a number of regulations and restrictions for electoral campaigns in the Students' Society was also passed by Council. It will have the effect of severely restricting the distribution of posters, handbills, buttons, and other campaign gadgets. Severe penalties have been established to enforce these regulations.

The Weatherman faction of the Chicago SDS addressed Council, asking for $1,000 from the Students' Society to be used as bail funds. After heated debate, two councillors, Barret and Kaulman left the meeting to break quorum and thereby prevent a vote.

Radio gets new time slot

by MARY SWAINE

In a meeting with Jim Kidd, the program director for CFCF-CFQR (FM) yesterday, the Managing Board of Radio McGill decided to do their weekly FM broadcast midnight Friday until 6 am Saturday, instead of from 10-12 on Sunday night.

They decided to sacrifice the big audience, and take an all-night slot, in order both to build their own audience, and to provide variety for the night listener.

Radio McGill has broadcast over CFQR-FM for approximately eight years. Before this year, CFQR did not have a large audience, but in the past year and a half it has become the top-ranking FM station in Canada.

The position of Radio McGill has thus become much more tenuous, because they are playing with a much larger audience. The increase in listeners is an important consideration, especially in commercial radio.

The first program of Radio McGill this year was unorthodox, as commercial radio goes. CFQR knew of this, and authorized the program.

However, technical problems, combined with the unorthodox nature of the program, led to complaining phone calls. CFQR therefore temporarily suspended the program until Radio McGill could satisfactorily work out what they were to do.

At the meeting yesterday, Mr. Kidd gave a description of the commercial broadcasting situation. A period of general questions followed, during which the staff of Radio McGill explained to Mr. Kidd how their ideas conflicted.

The program director then met with the Managing Board to finalize a solution. Both sides declared themselves to be well-satisfied with the arrangement.

Radio McGill has been promised $50,000 by the Board of Governors, and $76,000 by Students' Council, if they establish their own FM radio station, but this amount is not sufficient to ensure financial solvency.

Daily edges morons

by DICK ADAMS

Look-out Mets here comes the Daily floor hockey team. Approximately 1,000,000 sports fans jammed into the Currie Gym last night and witnessed the upset of the season as 8 goal favorites Radio McGill Morons fell prey to slick Daily jocks by a score of 4-3.

The Morons threaten to run the Dailies right out of the Gym as they piled up an early three-goal lead before their fatal collapse. Former Daily Editor and founder of Radio McGill, Chris Portnoy scored two goals and set up a third by big Jack Cohen to pace the FM squad.

Chuck Mallory, Leo "Fury" Beingas, and Tony Ziolkowski tied up the count in the second period and set the stage for Roger North's winner. North took a long lead pass from Charlie the K before rifling the bagel into the upper left hand corner for the deciding score.

The fans delirious with the taste of Daily victory raped head coach Wanda Lust who later disclosed, "I think I enjoyed it!" Wanda and her boys will return for a rematch in two weeks against the morons of the air waves.
